[illegible] Dialogue [illegible] young woman and her sweetheart.

To a pleasant new Tune,
[illegible]

AS I was walking forth,
I chanced for to see
A young man, and a maid,
but they not knew of me:
She being in the merry vein,
did chick him under the Chin,
And smiling in his face, she cry'd,
Alace poor thing.
She by his love and complements,
did understand and find.
That she might fitely let him know,
and understand her mind;
Presending for to stumble, on the ground her self did fling,
And said, sweet heart, I fell by chance,
[illegible] poor thing:
This [illegible] man standing still a while,
ev'n for a little space;
Then finding opportunity,
and a convenient place:
Underneath his Shadow bowers,
close by a pleasant Spring;
[illegible]
[illegible] poor thing.
I could not choose but laugh to see these two so close imploy'd;
This young man was contented,
the maid was overjoy'd:
Expressing of her love to him.
she closse did to him cling;
Then smiling in his face, she said,
Alace, poor thing,
It was not long before this youth was tyred with that sport;
And laid him down to rest a while,
and drew his breach full short:
She turn'd to him, and kissed him,
and closse to him did cling,
Then smiling in his face, she cry'd,
Alace, poor thing.
She finding him in fainting fits,
then she began to weep;
And with her hands she rub'd his Joynts
to keep this youth from sleep:
Thy weakneſſe, said she to him,
doth make my veins to sting,
Come fie for shame, rouse up thy self,
Alace, poor thing.
The Souldier that doth venture,
he ventures in the Field;
And that first repulse he get,
the day he will not yield;
He'l face about, and charge again,
and take the other fling,
So may best to second thee,
Alace, poor thing.
